

Acknowledgments

We'd like to thank...

Dr. Simon Rosenberg, who was the initial inspiration for Satura and who has continued to support the journal since the very beginning. We also owe him a review of his monograph, Book Value Changes and the Acceptance of Technological Changes in English Book Production.

The Open Journal Systems Team at WWU, especially Jens Unkenholz, who had to explain to a luddite (in English!) how to use the system to upload our journal articles.

The team at Zentrale Kustodie & Kulturbüro, especially Dr. Eckhard Kluth, who had to endure a copious amount of emails from us. We are greatly appreciative for the funding that allows us to print this very special edition of Satura.

Mareke Prahm, who gave hours of her time in order to assist Laura in learning InDesign.

The faculty at the WWU English Department, who encourage students to submit to Satura.

Our families and friends, who tirelessly put up with listening to us talk about Satura, and provide us infinite emotional and technical support.

The Satura team, most of whom have been with us since Volume One, and believe in the project as much as we do.

The contributors, who shared the wealth of their grief and fear and hope about the pandemic in these pieces.

But especially we would like to thank the people who have sacrificed their health and safety to keep the world going during a pandemic.
